In this program, we compare two different methods to sort vectors and linked lists. We find that linked list spend a smaller amount of time than the binary even it needs to iterate through all data to find the specific one. In conclusion, binary inserting search is less efficient than the linked list inserting sort.